Established and emerging companies rely on Emily's pragmatic, business-oriented counsel to proactively manage risk, and enforce their intellectual property rights.

With 15 years' experience in private practice and as senior IP counsel for a consumer products company, Emily understands the myriad day-to-day decisions involved in securing and protecting a brand's intellectual property assets. As outside counsel, she aids clients in developing strategies and implementing an array of brand protection and IP enforcement actions. In addition to representing clients in federal court litigation, before the Trademark Trial and Appeal Board, and in UDRP proceedings, Emily has extensive experience counseling clients in anti-counterfeiting measures and navigating the ever-changing landscape of online enforcement.

Emily works closely with clients to evaluate and manage legal, regulatory, and operational risks associated with consumer-facing products. Her expertise includes advising clients in the consumer electronics, health and beauty, food and beverage, fashion, and resort and hospitality industries.

Emily rejoins the firm after serving as in-house counsel for several years. She previously practiced at Goodwin Proctor LLP in New York and Boston.
