Alex represents clients at all phases of dispute resolution, from initial disagreement to litigation to appeal. Drawing on his in-house experience, Alex is adept at understanding business clients' needs and providing practical and timely guidance. He represents companies of all sizes operating in a variety of industry sectors, including hospitality and real estate, manufacturing, technology, and natural resources. Alex works closely with clients to proactively identify and resolve issues in order to manage risk, minimize costs, and efficiently pursue their business goals. When lawsuits are filed, clients benefit from Alex's experience litigating cases in various state and federal courts, including trials to verdict.

Before joining Holland & Hart, Alex worked as in-house counsel for an international resort management and outdoor recreation company, and he practiced at a large Denver-based law firm. After law school, Alex clerked for Judge Carolyn B. McHugh of the US Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit and Justice William W. Hood, III of the Colorado Supreme Court.

EXPERIENCE

Alex counsels clients through all stages of litigation, arbitration, and dispute-resolution in a broad range of cases, including in the following areas:

- Contract, including Uniform Commercial Code and other contract issues
- Real Estate, including commercial leases, easements, restrictive covenants, foreclosure, quiet title, and complex purchase and sale agreements
- Business Torts, including breach of fiduciary duty, fraud, negligent misrepresentation, and conversion
- Product Liability, including manufacturing defects, design defects, and breach of warranty
- Corporate Governance, including officer/director and manager duties, mismanagement, misappropriation, dissolution, and business divorce
- Trade Secrets, including DTSA and CUTSA claims, breach of non-disclosure agreements, and breach of non-compete agreements

Alex also regularly drafts and advises business and non-profit clients on waivers and releases of liability for recreational, competitive, and promotional activities and events.
