Corey leverages his experience in tax law and dispute resolution to support clients navigating complex federal, state, and local tax matters.

Having worked on both the administrative and judicial sides of tax practice, Corey brings valuable insights to advocacy and decision-making processes, developing effective strategies for resolving disputes and structuring positions to help meet clients' objectives. His hands-on experience, which spans tax policy analysis, precedent-setting determinations, settlement negotiations, and service as a subject matter expert for taxpayers and officials alike, provides him with a well-rounded understanding of the tax landscape that benefits clients facing multifaceted challenges.

Prior to joining Holland & Hart, Corey was a law clerk under Chief Judge Patrick Urda with the U.S. Tax Court.
