Conor's experience in consumer goods manufacturing and product development informs his practical approach to business litigation.

Conor works with clients in a variety of commercial disputes, including breach of contract, partnership disagreements, and other business litigation matters.

Before pursuing a legal career, Conor worked for two consumer goods manufacturers in the greater Denver metropolitan area, where he held production leadership and quality engineering roles. His experience managing teams and addressing operational challenges provides valuable insight into the day-to-day issues businesses face.

During law school, Conor served as a judicial extern for Judge Kathryn A. Starnella of the United States District Court for the District of Colorado and for Judges Ryan P. Loewer and Chantel E. Contiguglia of Jefferson County's First Judicial District. He also served as a legal extern in the Colorado Attorney General's Office Consumer Protection Section, where he worked on enforcement actions involving antitrust and false claims.

Before joining Holland & Hart as an associate, Conor participated in the firm's Summer Clerk program.
