Ryan is an experienced attorney and energy professional who counsels clients on complex transactions, regulatory matters, disputes, and public policy issues across the energy and natural resources sectors.

Ryan advises clients on a wide range of energy, natural resources, commercial, and regulatory matters. Drawing on experience in both private practice and senior leadership roles with the State of Alaska, he helps clients navigate complex business, operational, and legal challenges involving oil and gas development, commercial agreements and government regulation.

Ryan has represented clients in litigation, administrative proceedings, transactional matters, and regulatory disputes, with experience spanning commercial contracts, tax controversies, asset transactions, entity formation, and legislative policy initiatives. He has negotiated high-value commercial agreements, managed significant royalty and tax matters, and advised stakeholders on issues affecting the development and management of natural resources.

Before joining private practice, Ryan served in multiple leadership and advisory positions within the State of Alaska, including roles with the Department of Natural Resources and Department of Revenue, where he focused on oil and gas commercial strategy, tax administration, regulatory policy, and legislative affairs.

Ryan's practice is informed by a practical understanding of the energy industry and a collaborative approach to helping clients achieve their business objectives while managing legal and commercial risk.
